Further details

Whilst many parts will see a good deal of dry weather, areas of thunderstorms are likely to develop over parts of the UK or nearby continent, and will generally track north or north-westwards, potentially affecting many parts of the UK at some point. Eastern Scotland looks most at risk during the early hours of Wednesday, then southern parts of the UK see the risk increasing later in the day.

Where the storms occur the will be intense. Rainfall totals of 30-40 mm could fall in an hour, with some locations potentially receiving 60-80 mm in 3 hours, although these will be fairly isolated. Large hail, frequent lightning and gusty winds will be additional hazards.

Reason for update

The warning area had been shrunk, removing Northern Ireland and much of western Scotland.
